What is an echocardiogram?

An echocardiogram (or echo) uses ultrasound to create images of the heart. The sound waves show the function of your heart valves, the pumping action of your heart, and can detect any abnormalities.

A copy of your test findings will be sent to your referring and/or family doctor who can discuss the results with you.

What will happen during the test?

- You will be asked to undress from the waist up and given a gown to wear.
- Lying on an exam bed, a sonographer will place sticky electrodes on your chest to record your heartbeat.
- A water-based ultrasound gel will be put on your chest and a transducer device will be moved across your chest to create the images.
- You will be asked to turn to your side and may feel slight pressure as the device is positioned to get the best images of your heart.
